

Paramount Business Jets Maintains Relationships Over Bottom Line During Busy Holiday Season

Paramount Business Jets breaks with private jet charter industry practices in effort to build stronger relationships.

Tampa, FL (PRWEB) November 28, 2011

This holiday season is projected to be one of the busiest seasons for the private jet charter industry in many years and will act as a catalyst for the typical charter brokerage to raise their profit margins anywhere from 50 to 400 percent above their normal standards. Paramount Business Jets' core principles of trust and transparency still maintains relationships before profits by offering their members the lowest fixed management fees in the industry, 365 days a year to include all major holidays.

Senior VP of Sales and Services, Eric Ammon says, "We believe in educating our members about the true cost of private aviation through our transparent invoicing and by providing members with expert aviation consultants dedicated to representing only the client's interests in the marketplace. The more jet savvy the member, the more they appreciate our honest and informative approach."

Most aircraft during peak flying times may find themselves booked with one or two trips a day. Typical private jet flyers who maybe accustomed to keeping the aircraft with them for 4 to 5 days are now being told, by charter brokerages and operators, they need to purchase two round trips to complete their itinerary. To help combat these types of offers, Paramount Business Jets, with one of the largest database of available empty legs in the world, is dedicated to sourcing all reduced rate private charters scheduled to fly empty anywhere on the globe and passes on every dollar of these savings directly to their Jet Card Members.
